Making Stability Possible

Founded in 1988, SupportWorks Housing is Virginia's first nonprofit organization devoted to ending homelessness by providing safe, stable, and permanent housing paired with on-site supportive services.

Stable housing is where hope can take root and futures can be rebuilt. But a home alone is not enough—true stability grows from a foundation of consistent, compassionate support that is especially vital for individuals who have experienced homelessness and live with disabling conditions, serious mental illness, substance use disorders, and physical disabilities.

Every day, SupportWorks Housing serves communities across Richmond, Charlottesville, Hampton Roads, and throughout Virginia, ensuring that individuals and families have a dignified place to call home. We develop and operate affordable, permanent housing while providing supportive services tailored to each person's unique path forward—services that foster stability, independence, and long-term success.

With decades of combined experience, we partner with local service providers, community organizations, and public agencies to break cycles of homelessness and build stronger, healthier communities. Our work brings together real estate development, supportive services, data-driven strategy, and executive leadership to ensure that housing is not just obtained—but sustained.

Because home is more than shelter—it is the foundation where healing begins, dignity is restored, and stability takes root.

Our Mission

To end homelessness by providing permanent housing and supportive services.

A Letter to Our Supporters

Dear SupportWorks Housing friends and family—

We learn so much from the people we serve at SupportWorks Housing (SWH). We learn about their challenges and struggles, and more importantly, we learn about their accomplishments and triumphs. Most of these stories share a common theme: resilience.

This year, SWH has drawn upon these stories to discover our own resilience in the face of a vastly changed operating landscape. Tectonic shifts in federal and state priorities have impacted nearly every aspect of our business and services models. Our amazing SWH team has drawn on all of our experience, creativity, and resourcefulness to rise to these challenges and ensure that we continue to deliver on our mission to end homelessness.

But it is in the people we serve that we have found our most powerful inspiration. They know far better than anyone what it means to adapt and to persevere in the face of challenge. You'll read about two of them—Lavern and Jaya—in the following pages. Lavern and Jaya are powerful testaments to what's possible when individual resilience is combined with supportive services.

Another special group inspires us: the men and women who have served our country. And yet, far too many of our military veterans wind up unhoused. SWH is proud that our Support Services for Veteran's Families honors them by connecting veterans to housing and other vital support sources. I know you'll appreciate reading about this program as well.

Adapting to ongoing challenges can be exhausting, but I find strength in the Laverns, Jayas, veterans, and many others whose resilience inspires hope and energizes me.

On behalf of all of us at SWH, thank you for your continued partnership and support—it truly sustains and motivates us.

Stability Built on Trust and Partnership

How supportive services and property management work together to create lasting homes.

Every person who comes to SupportWorks Housing carries a story shaped by hardship, resilience, and survival. Many have lived for years without a safe place to call home, while navigating serious mental illness, substance use disorders, physical disabilities, or the lasting effects of trauma. Housing is the beginning—but it is not the end of the journey.

At SupportWorks Housing, stability is built through relationships rooted in dignity, consistency, and trust. Supportive services staff walk alongside residents as they rebuild their lives—helping them access healthcare, stabilize income, reconnect with community, and develop the skills needed to live independently. Progress is rarely linear, and success often comes quietly, over time.

At the same time, property management teams create and maintain safe, welcoming communities where residents can focus on healing rather than survival. Clean, well-maintained housing is more than an operational priority—it is a reflection of respect and belonging. When residents feel secure in their homes, the foundation for lasting stability is strengthened.

What makes this work possible is the intentional partnership between supportive services and property management. Teams communicate regularly, respond early to challenges, and share responsibility for resident well-being. This integrated approach allows SupportWorks Housing to adapt thoughtfully to individual needs while maintaining strong, stable communities.

Together, these efforts transform housing into more than shelter. They create homes where people are supported, seen, and given the time they need to rebuild. This commitment to care and coordination is why so many residents remain stably housed—and why new beginnings become possible.

Resilience and Renewal

Lavern's Journey to Independence

For Lavern Smith, resilience isn't just a word—it's a way of life. After five years at New Clay House (NCH), she moved into her own apartment in Maryland in August 2024, marking the next step in a journey defined by courage, faith, and perseverance. Today, she works at Food Lion, enjoys spending time with her adult son, and reflects with pride on how far she has come.

Before arriving at NCH in 2019, Lavern's life had unraveled. Addiction had cost her a job, a home, and her sense of stability. She even had scrapes with the law. For six months, a homeless shelter was the only home she had. "When you're going through homelessness, you feel alone and unseen," she recalls of those days.

But Lavern's fighting spirit never gave up. The opportunity to move into NCH—and the guidance of the SupportWorks Housing team—gave her the structure and community she needed to start again.

"NCH was like a family," she says. "They helped me get to meetings, supported me with food, and worked with me when times were hard." Bit by bit, she rebuilt her confidence and learned to trust her own strength. She found full-time work. With encouragement from staff, she began to see NCH as a stepping stone toward independence.

Leaving was both exciting and frightening. "It was scary moving out of state," Lavern admits. "But I told myself, you've come a long way." Six years clean, free of probation, and working on driving again, she still faces each day with the same determination and faith that brought her through her darkest period.

"SupportWorks helped me see that strength isn't about never falling—it's about getting back up," she says. "I'm a fighter. I thank God and SupportWorks every day. Everybody has the opportunity to rise, just like I did."

Voices of Impact:

How Our Team Builds Homes and Hope

Del Smith-Davis

Associate Director of Services

“I can sincerely say that I am proud of all the residents we serve that are working towards wellness stability. When I hear the residents say, “Ms. Del we know you have our backs” That’s what keeps me going and makes it all worth it.”

“When property management and service teams work together, maintenance is faster, common areas are well-kept, and issues are prevented—creating a safer, cleaner, and more comfortable environment that boosts resident satisfaction.”

Shaniqua Faulk

Associate Director of Property Management

“The most rewarding part of working with the organization is fulfilling its mission. Giving someone who may have lost hope a second chance at life and restoring their dignity is both heart-wrenching and deeply meaningful.”

“Collaboration between Property Management and Supportive Services is essential. Each brings unique skills, and together they achieve the best outcomes for the mission, residents, and organization.”

Anthony Clary

Program Manager of Services

“What makes our organization unique and awesome is, yes, we build high quality affordable housing communities. But what makes us even better is that we are building people. Helping them gain independence and confidence in themselves that they can move on from under the SupportWorks Housing umbrella and become productive members of the community.”

Sharonita Cousin

Associate Director of Services

“The most rewarding thing for me is collaborating with staff and community partners to turn complex systems into clear, workable structures that truly support the populations that we serve.”

Serving those who Served: Support Services for Veteran's Families

They served their country in the most loyal way possible: pledging their lives to defend its people and principles. They served across all parts of the globe, leaned in to danger, and opened themselves to deep trauma. When their military service ended, too many of these veterans found civilian life overwhelming, disconnected from the support they needed by a stifling bureaucracy. They suffered and they slipped until they wound up on the streets.

This reality is far more common than many people believe, and it is why SWH's Support Services for Veteran's Families (SSVF) is such an impactful program. SSVF offers rapid rehousing for the unhoused and prevention supports for those in danger of losing their housing. “There are no barriers to entry,” says Olisha Sawyer, SSVF's Quality Assurance Coordinator, “and every veteran in the program is 100% supported by case management.”

Jennifer Dennis, SSVF Team Lead, says, “Case management means everything from helping connect them to the benefits they earned through their service to rental or utility assistance.” Mental and physical healthcare, Dennis goes on to say, is especially needed by many of these veterans.

The results are life-changing. Sawyer and Dennis both speak to how housing and services empower people to thrive. Some veterans in the program were unhoused for 20 years and had been written off by just about everyone, and now through SSVF lead healthier and stable lives. Many are working for the first time in decades, or reconnecting with family.

SSVF aims to serve 300 veterans and their families in the Richmond, Petersburg, and Charlottesville communities. But they are more than numbers. Sawyer emphasizes treating every person with dignity, honoring those who served and doing everything possible to give back in gratitude.

Resilience in the Making

Building the next generation of permanent, supportive housing across Virginia

Resilience does not happen by accident. It is built—intentionally, thoughtfully, and with a long-term commitment to stability. At SupportWorks Housing, our Real Estate Development team plays a critical role in ensuring that the communities we serve today will continue to have access to safe, permanent homes well into the future.

Our work is rooted in collaboration—across disciplines, across regions, and across partnerships. Each new development or renovation reflects not only a physical structure, but a shared belief in the dignity and potential of the people who will one day call these places home. From early planning through construction and long-term stewardship, our team approaches development with the same care and accountability that define our services and operations.

Elliot Warsof

Associate Director of Real Estate Development

"The most rewarding part of my job is the collaboration between colleagues and external partners. I know, for a fact, that the people I work with every day share similar views about the populations we serve. We are making real, tangible progress toward ending homelessness, one person at a time."

Looking ahead, SupportWorks Housing continues to advance projects that expand and preserve permanent supportive housing across Virginia. In Hampton Roads, the Gosnold II renovation represents a reinvestment in an established community, strengthening existing housing to ensure long-term stability for current and future residents. In Charlottesville, Vista 29 is moving steadily toward completion, with homes expected to be ready in Q4 2026. In Richmond, Greenview Apartments is preparing to break ground in 2027, marking another step forward in addressing the need for deeply affordable housing paired with supportive services.

Together, these projects reflect both where we are going and who we have always been: builders of stability with a steadfast, long-term commitment to communities. Through careful planning, strong partnerships, and a shared sense of purpose, SupportWorks Housing continues to build lasting stability—one key, one home, one person at a time.

Resilience and Recovery

Jaya's Recovery Journey Gives Back

Jaya Frye moved from Front Royal to Richmond in 2022 bringing little more than hope and determination. Hope for a her recovery from substance abuse disorder, and determination to help others do the same.

Richmond was a fresh start and also an unfamiliar landscape. Jaya knew she needed to find a place to live that would support her recovery. Doing her own research, she found SupportWorks Housing (SWH), and specifically New Clay House (NCH).

"I needed a place that understood my past but didn't judge me for it," says Jaya. She applied and was accepted, and, "once I got that key to my apartment, I knew I was at a positive turning point."

Not only has Jaya thrived, she has dedicated herself to helping others find their own positive turning point. She works as a case manager for Born2BGreat, an addiction recovery program, where she manages a house of eight women as they work on their own healing journeys.

She takes inspiration from the uplifting environment she found at NCH. "They understand that my life has not been perfect

"They make it possible for me to take responsibility for things that others take for granted."

Things like having her own name on a lease. And having her name on bills—as well as paying those bills on time. "Those details are so important. I am living a responsible life."

"They see me. They make sure to greet me, to ask how I'm doing. They make this building a home."

For Jaya, it all comes down to the people. These are the details that matter when you are on a recovery journey, and Jaya takes those practices into the recovery house she manages.
